Dear Nigel

Further to our telephone conversation please find within the shoes that have withstood the ultimate test. As the attached letter validates they were worn everyday for 167 days and managed to see just about the entire world.

I would have to say that they were so comfortable that I was even wearing them after my return despite the rather obvious wear to the heels.

May they enjoy a more relaxed time in your museum.

As discussed, if at any stage that you may want to use then fact that they were part of the All Nations Quest in advertising or similar, then we would be pleased to discuss at that time the nature of compensation. Until then we are happy for you to feature our involvement on your website and other direct to retailers' type messages.

I will be in Dunedin on the 13th of October for the launch of the second book to come from the Quest. "My Dream" features the photos of over 90 children from 90 different countries and their answers to 'If any one of your dreams could come true, what would it be'. Judging by the pre orders that Penguin has received, it will be a best seller in NZ, in addition to having received positive international orders.

The first book 'An Absolutely Outrageous Adventure' is being released on the 2nd of September. My memory is a little vague, but I am certain that there are photos within it that show your shoes in some rather interesting locations. I can arrange on your behalf for copies of both books should you want to send for example a different type of Christmas present to your clients this year.

I look forward to meeting you in October.

Kind regards

John Bougen
